- Awesome!
- Dr. Toll may be new to LSSU, but he is a great professor and knows how to teach!

- The class was enjoyable in some aspects, sort of...Boring isn't the right word, but much of what was covered I already knew and had known for years. You're a fun teacher, and teach well. It's certainly interesting seeing college students struggle to wrap their heads around the issues that come up because of Freedom of Speech and Freedom of Religion and scratching their heads wondering why they can't just force everyone at gun/media point to think exactly like them.

I have to apologize for thinking your actual political beliefs were just luke-warm neoliberalism, I've had bad experiences with professors in the humanities having political views that are less nuanced than one would hope someone with a PhD would have and being very, very, very open about them. I see the value in speaking ill specifically of the Republican Party and next to never so on the Democratic Party as a pedagogical tool to motivate an otherwise apathetic student body to care about politics works well to motivate a 'fighting the corrupt badguy group' feeling, but I believe it leaves something to be desired. Teaching students (I almost typed "kids" knowing full well that the classroom has no one less than 18 years old in it) to think only one political party (or any group) is the only problem seems at best a willful misleading of the students (for every ill the Republican party has engaged in the Democrats have also committed one).
